2. Language Laboratory

Even among people of average and high intellect, a language laboratory recognizes the existence and prevalence of significant individual variances in language aptitude. It takes a largely individualized approach. A language lab gives students plenty of time for oral and auditory exercises. It gives students the chance to practice speaking in the target language and hear it spoken by a native speaker. A language lab offers drills that are thoughtfully planned and produced, relieving the teacher of the monotonous repetition of patterns.

Because they provide students with an effective and dependable structured eLearning environment, language labs are gaining significant significance. Modern technology

As they help the teacher create a more appealing learning environment for the student and are able to provide their pupils with more practice hours and current tasks than can be found in language books, they are becoming more common in classrooms.
